

Austin Children's Health Project

The Austin Children's Health Project (ACHP) serves patients from diverse backgrounds in the Austin area, regardless of their insurance status. These include children with complex medical issues, as well as the medically underserved, such as those who have recently immigrated. Families who receive services from ACHP are less likely to be current on immunizations, and their previous preventative or other kinds of healthcare often has been limited. Patients are primarily referred to the clinic through schools in the Austin area, with which ACHP has had long relationships, and numerous other community partners. By bringing consistent, quality medical services to isolated communities and providing care regardless of ability to pay, ACHP helps to overcome persistent barriers to healthcare in the region: geographic isolation; and lack of transportation, insurance, and financial resources.

Service Delivery

- School-based
- Fixed site clinic
- Community centers
- Telehealth

Demographic Snapshot

- 50% Hispanic/Latinx
- 13% Black
- 51% Children 0-5 years
- 24% Adolescents
- 51% Female

Services Provided

- Primary care
- Health education
- Mental health counseling
- Developmental evaluations
- Subspecialty care (through partnership)
- Case management

Partner Institution

Dell Children's Medical Center

Partners Since

1995

2022 Total Visits

2,507

2022 Patients

816

Ages Served

0-19

Focus Areas

Adolescents; Immigrant children